My ideal society, or utopia, would be a world where humans would be happy every day. Crime does not exist, so there are no bad people, only good.

Machines take care of the primary resources humans need, like food, houses etc. But the machines also take care of themselves, so they build more machines if needed and repair other machines, so humans do not have work anymore.
All humans have to do is engage is social activities with each other, have fun, and educate each other.

What is good and bad are taught to children by serious games, because games are fun and having fun makes humans happy. Because there exists no crime people will always stick to these rules.

Because the machines take care of everything, money is not needed anymore, so there are no rich and poor people. The rules of the society never change, so there is no need for leaders or government, so really everybody is equal.

The only enemy people have will be time. So people will look for ways of getting more time in life, to enjoy there life even longer.

For example transport goes by teleportation, so it does not matter where on the world you live, you can always visit someone without wasting too much time on traveling.

But there is a problem....
This would be my ideal world, but humans are creative and unique, so this would not be the perfect world for somebody else living in my world. Therefor the perfect society would on be possible if it is a world where everyone lives in their own fantasy, and never wakes up from it.
