"Utopia (/juːˈtoʊpiə/) is an ideal community or society possessing a desirable socio-politico-legal system„[1]

Environment

Instead of using the environment, we will be working with the environment. All energy that is consumed will be from green renewable sources. Because the cars won't have exhaust fumes, there can be more roads close to the nature, as there are no fumes to damage the nature.

System

They say that communism is perfect in theory, the reality, however, shows that it is not an ideal system in this modern civilization. If you take communism out of the context of this modern world, and apply it in an utopian world, it would fit perfectly. Everybody does what he/she is good in, and everything is distributed equally. To reach more wealth, people won't reach for the top as individuals, but as a community.

Rules

The rules will be simple, as everybody should love and take care of each other. Punishment shall be given where needed, the people will decide together what punishment is fitting for the crime that is committed.

Values

As explained earlier, the people will work, think and act as a community. Everybody shares the same religion, as in utopia there will only be one religion (this will not be a religion we know today).

In a way you can think of Utopia as the world thousands years ago, with a dash of the modern world (for instance medicine).